MLA’S KATHERINE SINGER KOVACS PRIZE AWARDED TO NICHOLAS R. JONES FOR STAGING HABLA DE NEGROS; LAURA J. TORRES-RODRÍGUEZ RECEIVES HONORABLE MENTION

New York, NY – 5 January 2021 – The Modern Language Association of America today announced its thirtieth annual Katherine Singer Kovacs Prize for an outstanding book published in English or Spanish in the field of Latin American and Spanish literatures and cultures. The winner is Nicholas R. Jones, assistant professor of Spanish at Bucknell University, for his book Staging Habla de Negros: Radical Performances of the African Diaspora in Early Modern Spain, published by Penn State University Press. Laura J. Torres-Rodríguez, associate professor of Spanish at New York University, has received an honorable mention for her book Orientaciones transpacífica: La modernidad Mexicana y el espectro de Asia, published by the Department of Romance Studies at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

The Katherine Singer Kovacs Prize was established in 1990 by a gift from Joseph and Mimi B. Singer, parents of the late Katherine Singer Kovacs. The prize is one of eighteen awards that will be presented on 9 January 2021, during the association’s annual convention, to be held online. The members of the selection committee were Persephone Braham (Univ. of Delaware, Newark); Laura G. Gutiérrez (Univ. of Texas, Austin); Michelle Hamilton (Univ. of Minnesota, Twin Cities); Elizabeth Scarlett (Univ. at Buffalo, State Univ. of New York), acting chair; and Oswald Zavala (Coll. of Staten Island, City Univ. of New York). The committee’s citation for Jones’s book reads:

> The originality of Staging Habla de Negros: Radical Performances of the African Diaspora in Early Modern Spain cannot be overstated. In this important, well-founded exploration of an underrepresented topic, Nicholas R. Jones posits that an African diasporic identity was formed in Spain about three hundred years before the typical chronology situates its ascent on the other side of the Atlantic. With authoritative yet delightful prose, Jones remedies the neglect and oversimplification of representations of people of color in early modern Spanish literature. Black African characters and their Africanized Castilian language are studied insightfully in a corpus of dramatic and poetic texts ranging from Rodrigo de Reinosa through Lope de Rueda, Góngora, and Calderón de la Barca. A chapter on dances imported from sub-Saharan Africa and their reception in Spanish discourse is especially informative. Race theory, performance theory, and Black feminist criticism enrich this addition to European Renaissance and baroque, Africana, and Hispanic studies.

The committee’s citation of Torres-Rodríguez’s work reads:

> With Orientaciones transpacíficas: La modernidad mexicana y el espectro de Asia, Laura J. Torres-Rodríguez addresses a gap in cultural studies that often orientates Mexico toward Europe or the twin referents of indigenous cultures and Europe. In this view, the transatlantic often obscures the transpacific. Torres-Rodríguez turns in another direction as an important corrective, suggested by thinkers such as Alfonso Reyes and Octavio Paz and with some foundation already laid by Rubén Gallo (in art history) and others. Her execution of the concept is top-notch, balancing Lacanian and Derridean theory and Said’s notions of Orientalism (tempered by Sara Ahmed) with economic and social history. With a rigorous and painstaking approach, Torres-Rodríguez examines the Japonisme of the poet José Juan Tablada and the photographer Manuel Álvarez Bravo; the writings of José Vasconcelos; the intellectual Roger Bartra; the novel El complot mongol (The Mongolian Conspiracy), by Rafael Bernard; and the fin de siècle of our time. The result is compelling and should prove indispensable for further study.

The Modern Language Association of America and its over 24,000 members in 100 countries work to strengthen the study and teaching of languages and literature. Founded in 1883, the MLA provides opportunities for its members to share their scholarly findings and teaching experiences with colleagues and to discuss trends in the academy. The MLA sustains one of the finest publication programs in the humanities, producing a variety of publications for language and literature professionals and for the general public. The association publishes the MLA International Bibliography, the only comprehensive bibliography in language and literature, available online. The MLA Annual Convention features meetings on a wide variety of subjects.
